

Barry G. Roderman, Esquire Attorney At Law

After nearly 40 years practicing law in South Florida, Barry Roderman has lived a life that most of us can only dream about. Conversations with a U.S. President. Dining with international royalty. Trying a case on national television. Intense relationships with high-profile criminals...and their wives and children. After all, he's a prominent trial attorney; who else shares lengthy relationships with successful business leaders, top politicians, and alleged criminals alike?

But meet Barry today over a cup of coffee or on the 18th hole, and you'll instantly be at ease. You feel comfortable with a man who is comfortable with himself; a man whose top priority has been raising well-adjusted children, for a time as a single dad with sole custody. Oh, and his second priority? To practice law with every ounce of energy, every nuance of human intuitiveness, fully equipped with every resource necessary to build a case and gain the innate trust of client, judge, and jury.

Even before high school, Barry knew he wanted to become a lawyer. Roots of this drive stemmed from his father's relentless influence. A son of a Russian immigrant with a sixth-grade education, Barry epitomizes those things that make us proud about America. This is a guy whose heritage taught—no, demanded—that you work hard. You do better. You make a life for yourself; get a good education; and college? You go to college to learn, son. So Barry left his small country hometown with a few clothes, his books, and an entire arsenal of old-world ethics and honor.

At Ohio State, he worked hard, played hard—despite his father's warnings—and embraced life. Barry studied conscientiously, but his natural intelligence meant the Dean's List came easy. His affable smile and fraternity life meant plenty of time for pretty girls and lively parties. Barry soon fell in love and married young. He was 20; she was 18. Then came a flurry—a hectic pace—now nearly a blur of bittersweet memories. Western Reserve Law School, passing the Bar, President of the Young Republicans, and an intense schedule as a new public defender. The intensity proved too great on his young bride, who fled the marriage leaving two small children behind. Determined to raise them well, he withdrew from political life and focused on raising his family. Now, years later, Barry is remarried, a devoted father of four, and a grandfather.

Time has been good to Barry Roderman, Esquire. Those early qualities of honesty and integrity burned deeply into his persona and practice. Barry's peers have awarded him top rankings in professional excellence for ethics, reliability, diligence, and preeminent legal abilities. His love of life and work combined with a fierce competitiveness have earned the respect of clients, judges, and fellow attorneys. His trial experience ranges from criminal to civil, with numerable successes in high-profile, media intensive cases. His firm, Barry G. Roderman and Associates, P.A., is based out of Fort Lauderdale, although his client base extends nationally.

Barry's firm is recognized for its strengths and leadership in civil cases of every type as well as for the defense of various criminal cases in both State and Federal District and Circuit courts. With his carefully hand-picked staff, the firm's broad scope of expertise reaches into practically every area an individual or business could possibly need. Areas of practice include:

- Family law in all of its forms and intricacies. The firm handles pre- and post-marital agreements, divorces, child custody, visitation, child support, and various Family Court cases of varying degrees of complexity.
- Personal injury related to life's unfortunate events. Whether accidents, injury, malpractice, abuse, product liability, discrimination, or defamation, the firm attends to the needs of the client to mitigate negligence and suffering. With a policy of contingency fee agreements, clients incur no out-of-pocket expenses.
- The defense of economic, fraud, and white-collar crimes. With a stellar reputation in defense law, Barry has become highly respected in this area.
- A vast capacity of business and commercial practices encompassing all aspects of business relationships. The firm handles business formations, contracts, general legal counsel, fraud, dispute mediation, and so much more.

For each case, Barry and his staff examine every possible fact with an incredible attention to detail, and draw from a veritable storehouse of experience and knowledge to aggressively represent their clients. Barry's passion for excellence has been well-honed in every case, and imparted to each and every staff member.

As his father insisted, Barry has worked hard—and truly earned his fine reputation as a winner of favorable verdicts and substantial settlements. Other than pride in his children, his greatest passion is pursuing excellence in his practice. From humble beginnings to the peak of his career, Barry Roderman loves nothing more than giving it everything, preparing for that day in court, striving for the satisfaction of knowing he gave his ultimate best—and enjoying the sweet victory of success. Top it off with a round of golf, and you've found a man who is deeply satisfied.
